Environmental Program Offered

He said that the National Environmental Study Area (NESA) program will utilize the environment itself -- ranging from national parks and wildlife areas to inner city vest pocket parks -- as classrooms for students of all ages and grade levels to learn ecology.

In announcing the joint project, Secretary Hickel challenged the nation's teachers to participate in this first-of-its-kind effort; "As teachers, you can open up through this program a world as big and meaningful and beckoning as your own daring, imagination and enthusiasm let it be."

NEA's Association of Classroom Teachers, in cooperation with the American Association of Health, Physical Education and Recreation, is publishing the comprehensive guideline for teachers and school administrators who want to set up environmental study area programs.

George B. Hartzog, Jr., director of the National Park Service said, "Despite their extensive knowledge of study areas within the parks, our personnel, not being teachers, will rely on the teaching profession to furnish the necessary teaching know-how."

Donald F. Wilson, president of the Association of Classroom Teachers, voiced the hope that ACT's new publication -- "Man and His Environment: An Introduction to Using Environmental Study Areas" -- will attract a large number of teachers to the program.

Your local National Environmental Study Area at Appomattox Court House National Historical Park has been in operation since the spring of 1969.

Environmental Study Area at Appomattox Court House National Historical Park.

It is located just east of the restored village by the Appomattox River. The area contains the remains of a dam, an abandoned rock quarry, and farm land (you can still see the furrows) reverted to forests.

All this plus the natural history provides an ample source for teachers interested in the Environmental Education Program.

Any inquiries pertaining to this area should be directed to the Superintendent, Appomattox Court House National Historical Park, Box 218, Appomattox Va. 24522 or phone 352-8987.

Secretary of the Interior Walter J. Hickel said today that a joint program of the National Education Association and the Department of the Interior "will provide a comprehensive and far - reaching environmental education program for school systems in the United States."
